

The proposed action would eliminate protections currently in place in my state. I recently moved to Indiana and have had no problems with interruptions to dinner, studying, etc. due to telemarketing calls. In Michigan, where I previously resided, I was reduced to screening my calls to avoid the 10 unsolicited calls per evening. I think Indiana's law improves the quality of life for its citizens, and the FCC should not implement any proposal that lessens the current protections.